

Reviews, in three seconds

A counter stand your guests touch with their phone. It opens your Google review page — already loaded, ready to type. No app, no QR code, no searching for your name. Ready-made artwork or built around your business, programmed by hand and set up at your counter — and on the right side of Google's and Yelp's rules.

THE PROBLEM THIS SOLVES

Your best guests are the ones you never see again. In season, a large share of the room is visitors — they eat, they leave happy, they drive home, and the review they meant to write dissolves somewhere on the 50. The people who do write reviews unprompted are disproportionately the ones who had a bad night.

Asking works. Asking is also awkward, inconsistent between servers, and easy to forget on a Saturday at eight. And the moment you make the guest search for your name in Google Maps, you have lost most of them: it is a dozen taps of work for something they were only mildly motivated to do.

The whole product is one idea: remove every step between “I’d leave them a review” and the cursor blinking in the review box.

HOW IT WORKS

01 The guest taps the stand

A passive NFC chip sits behind the printed insert. There is no battery, no wi-fi, no power cable and nothing to charge — the phone itself powers the chip for the instant it takes to read it. Every iPhone from the XS (2018) onward and effectively every modern Android reads it with nothing installed and no app open: the guest just holds the phone near the stand.

02 A notification opens your review page

The phone shows a banner; one tap on it and your Google review sheet is on screen — your business name, your star rating, the text box. Not a landing page of mine, not a menu of options. Yours.

03 They write it on the spot

At the table, while the food is still in front of them and the server who took care of them is still in the room. That is the difference between a review you get and a review you don't.

WHAT THE GUEST NEVER HAS TO DO

- | | | |
|--|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| ✗ Download an app | ✗ Open the camera for a QR code | ✗ Type your business name |
| ✗ Pick you out of three similar listings | ✗ Give an email or a phone number | ✗ Be asked for anything by a server |

THE TWO PIECES

They cover the two moments that matter: while the guest waits, and when the check arrives.

A — The counter stand 8" × 2" · ANGLED ACRYLIC WITH A SWAPPABLE INSERT

Shown at 60 % of actual size. Two tap zones, one at each end, 5.4" apart — far enough apart that a phone can never read the wrong one.

- The insert slides out. The ready-made one is gold on a deep colour and suits any counter. The custom one carries your name, your colours and a photo of what you are known for — and because it is only paper, changing it later never means a new stand.
- It stays on your counter. Eight inches of angled acrylic does not walk out in a jacket pocket the way a loose card does, and the angle puts it where the guest is already looking while they wait to pay.
- Two destinations. The ready-made piece carries Google on one end and Yelp on the other. On a custom piece the second end goes wherever you want — TripAdvisor for lodging and tours, a booking link for a rental shop, or Google again.

B — The check-presenter card 3" × 8" · LAMINATED · TWO TAP ZONES

- Sized to be seen. Check presenters run about 5" × 9", so an 8" card stands well above the pocket and is the first thing the guest sees when the folder opens. A business card disappears inside it.
- The same two zones as the stand. Google at the top, Yelp at the bottom, far enough apart that a phone can only ever read the one it is held against. The guest gets the same choice they get at the counter — except now it is in their hand, at the most satisfied moment of the visit.
- One per bill folder — most rooms run ten to twenty, and they are cheap enough to replace when one gets wet.
- Two finishes. Cream against a dark vinyl folder, navy against a light one — whichever way round your check presenters are, the card reads instantly.

THE DETAILS A MANAGER ASKS ABOUT

POWER AND UPKEEP	None. The chip is passive — the phone powers it for the instant of the read. Nothing to charge, no wi-fi, no pairing, and the chip is sealed under the insert or the laminate, so nightly wipe-downs don't touch it.
PHONES	iPhone XS (2018) and newer read it with the screen on and no app open. Android has read tags natively for years. Older iPhones use the reader in Control Center.
RANGE	About an inch and a half. It has to be a deliberate tap, which is the point — a phone in a pocket never triggers it.
IF YOUR LISTING CHANGES	The tag carries your Google review link. If you rebrand and Google issues a new listing, the tag has to be rewritten — a two-minute job on the same piece, not a reprint.
GUEST DATA	None is collected. The tag opens Google and does nothing else — no sign-up, no email capture, no tracking of the guest.

WHAT THE SAME THING COSTS ONLINE

Advertised prices for a single review card, August 2026.

	ORDERED ONLINE	HERE
One review card	$25 – $30	$15
Average of five sellers	$26.39	$15
Cheapest listing found anywhere	$16.98	$15
Who writes your link to the tag	You do — into a web form	I do, at your counter
How it reaches you	Post, one to four days	In your hand, today
When something goes wrong	A support form	(385) 395-2285

THE PART THE PRICE DOESN'T SHOW

Every one of those sellers is a website. You order, you paste your Google link into a form and hope you pasted the right one, and a card turns up in the post a few days later. Nobody has tested it on a phone. Nobody has seen your counter. If it doesn't work, you fill in a contact form and wait.

I live here. I look up your listing in front of you, write it to the tag, and tap it on my own phone at your counter before I hand it over — so the first time it is ever used, you are watching. You never type a URL. And you have my number, not a ticket queue.

That is 43 % below the average of those five, and 12 % below the cheapest listing that exists anywhere online — and that one is a blank card that turns up in an envelope for you to programme yourself.

Sellers checked: ReviewZaps, Taps Reviews, TAPro Card, TAPiTAG and OneTap Review, plus the cheapest Etsy listing found. Advertised single-unit prices, August 2026 — they move, so treat them as the ballpark they are.

PRICE

You are buying hardware plus one visit: I program it with your listing and leave it working. The piece is yours from then on.

ONE AT A TIME	PLAIN	+ LOGO	PACKS	PLAIN	+ LOGO
Counter stand	$30	$33	1 stand + 5 cards	$85	$100
Check-presenter card	$15	$18	2 stands + 10 cards	$150	$175
2 stands	$50	$55	4 stands + 20 cards	$280	$320
5 cards	$65	$80

One-time, nothing to sign, nothing monthly. Logo and colours: +$3 a piece, less inside a pack. The price you see is the price you pay — no tax, no fees, no setup charge.

IT FOLLOWS THE RULES — AND MOST OF THIS CATEGORY DOESN'T

The penalties for review manipulation land on your business profile, not on whoever sold you the device.

NO FILTER SCREEN, EVER

Some competitors sell a middle page: “How was your experience?” — happy faces go to Google, unhappy faces go to a private complaint form. That is review gating. Google prohibits it outright and it falls under the FTC rule on review suppression in force since October 2024. These stands open Google directly; whoever taps it writes whatever they want.

NO INCENTIVES

Nothing is ever offered in exchange for a review — no free dessert, no discount, no raffle entry. Google removes reviews obtained that way and can suspend the business profile that collected them.

YELP, HANDLED THE WAY YELP ASKS

Yelp does not allow businesses to solicit reviews at all, and enforces it with a public Consumer Alert on the listing and a year of lost advertising eligibility. So that end never says “review us” and never opens a review form: it says Find us on Yelp and opens your Yelp page — Yelp’s own recommended wording, from the badges they hand out free. It sends people to your listing; it does not manufacture reviews.

HOW WE START

01

You tap it, right now

The piece in my hand already carries your review link. You tap it, your page opens. Ten seconds, no explaining.

02

You pick what you want

How many stands, how many cards, ready-made or with your logo on it. Custom artwork gets proofed before I print.

03

I set it up at your counter

I come in with my laptop, write your listing to the tags and test every piece in front of you. You pay once; it is yours.

START WITH ONE

Thirty dollars, working on your counter before I leave. Add the cards once you have seen it pull a review.
